Good Scents

An Essential Introduction

Carol Duncan LMT, RA

By now we are all familiar with Aromatherapy. It seems everywhere we turn, there are companies looking to make a profit on anything with a fragrance. Just stop skipping over commercials with your DVR and you'll surely see at least one every hour. From Plug-Ins to vacuum canisters with an essential oil well for improving the smell of your rooms, to candles and other scented products.

As a massage therapist, you probably have at least one or two bottles lying around that add to the experience of your massage. Then there are the heavy-duty users that have thousands of dollars tied up in every conceivable essence imaginable. Did you know there was essential oil of carrot seed? This is the first in a series of articles designed to help you develop a better understanding of essential oils. From common to less-used essences, different methods of utilizing them will be discussed for you to enhance both your massage practice and your life.

First and foremost, essential oils do not follow the rule that if a little is good, then a lot is better. Because essential oils are highly concentrated, they can burn if improperly used. It's a good rule of thumb to never use oils "neat" (without diluting them) on the skin unless you are a trained professional.

I recommend that you research any oils you use to see what is the best way to use them: perhaps in a massage blend, inhaled, or in a potpourri. Some can even be taken internally, but this should only be done under the care of a Licensed Physician, Naturopathic Physician or Registered Aromatherapist.

Diffusion (where the essential oil is allowed to permeate the air so that it can be inhaled) is popular. There are many types of diffusers, ranging from ones that plug in to car lighters to expensive electric ones that can diffuse through an entire office building. Typically, using diffusion is fine in your home with an oil that you love. Remember though that not all who come into contact with diffused oils will appreciate the same essences and what is loved by some can be offensive to others.

To test an essential oil with an individual, a simple way to start is to allow them to choose a scent or recommend one for a specific reason. Put a small amount on a cotton ball and place it under their nose. A drop of eucalyptus or ravensara on the cotton ball can help keep sinuses open, which can be particularly effective when your client comes out of the face cradle and has that initial "stuffed up" feeling.

One of the fascinating things about the sense of smell is the connection to memory. Many people associate memories with specific smells and can recall events they may not have remembered otherwise when they come in contact with that smell later. Using this to your advantage, you can send the cotton ball home with the client to smell until the aroma has dispersed. This can last several days or even a week depending on the oil used.

An added bonus to using this trick is that each time your client smells the aroma, they will think of you and their last visit. They can even share the smell with friends and that can generate more interest in your massage business. People love little gifts—this can be a gift that keeps on giving. Let the client know that to fill a room with the aroma to place the cotton ball in the heater vent or the grate of a fan in your room. This can be changed out very quickly with a new aroma by changing the cotton ball.

Throw the old cotton ball in the trash for a fresher smelling trash bin. I like to put the used cotton ball under the seat in my car. Each time the heat comes on or the sun warms up the inside of the car, the aroma fills the space and is refreshing each time I get in to go somewhere. Be creative and think of other ways to use up the remnants of a good aroma.

Carol Duncan has been an LMT since 1997 and a Registered aromatherapist since 2004. Trained through the Australasian College of Health Sciences and continuing education in Provence, France, she does Raindrop Therapy, Aromareflex, and custom blending. Duncan owns and operates Massage Central, a thriving massage practice in Sutherlin, Oregon.

Colored Light Therapy

Integrating Healing of Body, Soul, and Spirit

Manohar Croke, MA, CCP

New light healing technologies, which harness color and light frequencies, are now used with excellent and fascinating results. The following case study is an example of how colored light can be used to facilitate healing at body, soul, and spirit levels simultaneously.

Ann, a 45-year-old businesswoman, came to me for treatment after a mastectomy and lymph node surgery had left her with a painful condition of edema or swelling in her arms and hands. As we talked about her situation, I also learned that Ann was in a frustrating, underpaid job and was struggling in her intimate relationship with her partner.

I explained that colored light applied to her body would balance Ann's energy flow and restore proper "biocommunication" between her cells. In particular, a light treatment designed to regulate the lymph system might help resolve her edema problem. I also mentioned that the light would bring up and help release any old unresolved emotional conflicts that might have stressed her immune system and made her vulnerable to cancer in the first place.

After the first treatment, Ann called to say that the swelling and her edema had improved considerably. She also noticed a general sense of well being and relaxation. Over the course of several treatments, Ann's continued to improve physically, but what amazed her most were the psychological and emotional shifts she experienced. Ann's dreams began to take on a more vivid quality, often containing powerful symbols and messages. Long buried memories of her childhood began to surface. She had had a very difficult childhood, especially a painful relationship with a cold, rejecting mother. The pain of these memories slowly surfaced and released with the light treatments. Eventually, Ann began to question her current life situation. She realized that her personal relationship was emotionally abusive and decided to end it. Not long after that, she decided to quit her job, which she felt was a dead-end. Instead, she returned to graduate school to pursue her long-held dream of obtaining a graduate degree in art therapy. To date, her original symptom of edema no longer bothers her and her general health is good.

As this story suggests, colored light is a powerful key to unlock the mysterious connections between body, mind and spirit. Light has often been used as a metaphor for the highest potential in human development, "enlightenment" and the ultimate direction for our souls, "into the light." I suggest that these metaphors are pointing toward a more literal truth. Light can help us to heal emotionally and evolve spiritually, even as it supports our physical healing.

How Do Light Frequencies Affect the Human Body?

Light frequencies enter the body through the eye and the skin. Electromagnetic impulses activated by light travel along the optic nerve of the eye deep into the brain. There, for example, the impulses influence the workings of the hypothalamus (a part of your middle brain), the pituitary (the master endocrine gland of the body) and the pineal gland. These parts of your brain and glandular system are involved with the production of biochemical substances that influence many bodily functions – including mood regulation, the onset of puberty, sexual functioning, aging, the immune system and much more.

the retina of the eye, are actually distributed through every tissue of the body. Scientists now understand that light entering the skin also travels deep into the body via the acupuncture meridians, and even more subtly, from cell to cell. A renowned German biophysicist, Dr. Fritz Albert Popp, has come closest to proving that we are actually beings of light. Popp's research has demonstrated that human cells are constantly emitting low levels of light radiation. He calls this radiation "biophoton emission." Popp believes that cells communicate via biophotons. These findings inspired Popp's colleague, a German naturopath and light therapy originator, Peter Mandel. According to Mandel:

"Light is life . . . Specifically, light is present in the communication between the cells in the body, and disease occurs when this communication is broken, when the cells can no longer speak the same language. Giving light has a resonance effect, bringing cells into the same language again and healing the body."

Light is life . . .

—Peter Mandel

In addition, each wavelength of light, perceived by the human eye as a different color, has different effects on both body and mind. The chart on page 4 summarizes how various colors are used in the system of Esogetic Colorpuncture™. These particular guidelines are fairly consistent in most color therapy systems. For example, red light tends to have the greatest power of penetration, and is stimulating or even heating. In the body, red light helps increase blood supply and circulation in an injured area, thereby promoting faster healing. Emotionally, red light has a cheering and exciting effect, and can arouse passion.

Lighting Up the Frontiers of the Bodymind

Today's pioneers in the field of color and light therapy are particularly interested in light's capacity to reach into our subconscious mind with ease and speed. The fact that light can so profoundly effect our emotions and our spirit, even as it influences the well-being of the body, is inspiring the development of many new light therapy technologies.

"Light has a way of bringing up to the surface old, unresolved, unexpressed emotional trauma, which I feel are the roots of the weed we call disease," says optometrist, light therapist and author, Jacob Liberman. Liberman developed a system to introduce light through the eye for bodymind healing. Psychotherapist and light practitioner, Dr. Stephen Vasquez, also believes that colored light acted as a catalyst to bring unconscious material to the surface. In his psychotherapy practice, he combines colored light, introduced through the eye, with traditional counseling methods to speed up clients' healing processes. Peter Mandel originated a system of acu-light therapy in which colored light is applied to points on the skin. Mandel maintains that light and color can heal the "background" of illness: long-held emotional conflicts which weaken our bodies and set us up for disease. He believes light can be used to speed up the exchange of information between the conscious, unconscious and super conscious mind, thereby supporting our individual evolution.

Whatever the light therapy method, healing with colored light is a gentle and uniquely respectful process. Light never imposes any particular direction upon the client. Rather it supports the discovery of your own truth. For each of us, the journey toward healing and self-discovery will follow an individual path. In closing, consider these words by Peter Mandel for your inspiration:

"We who are imprisoned in matter have to bring our [inner] 'I' out of matter and darkness, and into the light. On the level of the material world, we humans, in our wholeness, are light beings. We must and always will develop toward the absolute light, which we call God. In this process, we are accompanied by the light on the outside and, if we allow it, the light on the inside."

Manohar Croke, M.A., CCP is the founder and Director of the Institute for Esogetic Colorpuncture, USA, dedicated to sharing the work of Peter Mandel in the United States. She teaches seminars on the Esogetic Colorpuncture acu-light system of Peter Mandel around the country, as well as lecturing and writing on the subject of light therapy. A psychotherapist with training in trauma resolution and psycho-spiritual process work, Manohar uses colored light in her own private practice to support the healing and personal evolution of her clients.

It's Your Money

Robert Bike

There are lots of ways to make money. There are even more ways to save money. Here are two tips that could save or make you thousands of dollars this year!

Tip # 1: Make Money

The Department of Veterans Affairs (the VA), operates clinics and hospitals throughout Oregon. There is an office that helps businesses get contracts with the VA.

The Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization (OSDBU) advocates, assists and supports the interests of small businesses. They are particularly looking for the maximum practical participation of small, disadvantaged, veteran-owned, women-owned and empowerment zone businesses in contracts awarded by the VA. They advise businesses on marketing their products and services to the VA and other federal agencies. You can find them at <http://www4.va.gov/osdbu/>.

Think big. Market your services to people who really need healing, our returning veterans.

Tip # 2: Save Money

The State of Oregon has a program where you do not have to pay your real estate taxes!

If you own your own home and are elderly or disabled, the state will pay your county the taxes due. The taxes, interest at six percent, and a deferral fee will be placed as a lien on your title.

To qualify, your household income must be less than $39,000 (the amount changes every year), you must own the property (or are buying it), and you must live on the property.

If at least one property owner is disabled (on Social Security disability, you may qualify under the disabled option.

If at least one spouse is 62, you may qualify under the elderly option.

There are a few minor restrictions, but most homes will qualify. If you sell the home, the liens will automatically collect. But if you live in the house until you die, you will never have to pay the taxes, though whoever inherits the property will.

This program may save you thousands of dollars every year. See <http://www.oregon.gov/DOR/SCD/scsa.shtml> or your county tax office for all the details.

OMTA Needs New Rules Committee Liaison

For the past four years, OMTA has had a representative on the Rules Committee. This position is now vacant and needs to be filled in order for the organization to be represented as the Rules Committee moves forward. All LMTs are welcome in the committee, but OMTA needs a formal representative for this position who is responsible for reporting the items addressed by the committee and taking concerns of OMTA members to the committee for consideration. If you are interested, please contact OMTA President, Robert Bike at (541) 465-9486.

QuickBooks Questions

Handling Duplicate Transactions

Jennifer Rodriguez

Have you ever run into the situation where you entered a transaction twice in QuickBooks? Don't worry—these brain cramps happen to all of us periodically.

Delete vs Void

The question then becomes: how do you get rid of the duplicate transaction? While your first thought might be to delete the transaction, that choice is NOT your best one. There needs to be a trail, and deletion can eliminate that trail entirely.

Whenever you have a situation where something has been duplicated, the best practice in addressing it is to VOID the transaction, so the trail remains.

Correct the Error Properly

Let's say you have entered a check twice into your register. If you right-click on the check, or click Edit in the menu bar, you will find the options to either Delete Check or Void Check. (if you use an version of QuickBooks older than 2009, you will not see the Delete Check as a right click option)

Either way, be sure to choose the Void Check option. By choosing the "Void" option, you leave the transaction intact within QuickBooks. The only thing that changes is that the amount of the transaction is reset to $0.00.

Why Voiding is Better

It keeps your outside/tax accountant sane. If you delete a transaction, it is completely gone from QuickBooks (other than a record in the audit trail being created). Your outside accountant normally creates workpapers and reports based on your QuickBooks data. In many cases, the accountant uses those numbers on an ongoing basis. If you delete a transaction that affects one of those numbers, you've immediately introduced heart palpitations and created a "Tums Moment," as the numbers won't match because the transaction doesn't exist anymore. Granted, even if you void the transaction, the numbers won't match, but voiding leaves a trail to follow. It is much to deal with something that is voided than it is with something that is deleted.

You can include a helpful note on a voided transaction. The fact that QuickBooks retains all the other details of the transaction allows you to add a note for future reference as to why this transaction was voided. Deleting does not allow this option.

Best Practice

Every transaction entry screen (invoice, bill, check, credit card, etc.) in QuickBooks has the option to Void or Delete. Choose Void: your outside accountant will hug you for making this choice!

Free Classes from Schools Around the World

Need to brush up on your A&P? Looking for marketing ideas to help carry you through a struggling economy? How about trying to write a successful business plan and pitch it to get a loan?

If you're not sure where to start—and, more importantly, you don't want to waste money trying out different things that may not work for you, there's no better deal than FREE. You do need a computer, internet access, and a little time, but the rest is easy.

Apple launched iTunes University, which has a library of a wide range of courses from colleges and universities around the U.S. and the world. Some of the courses are essentially video of regular classes while others are shorter audio clips. Schools range from Stanford to Yale, State schools to International Universities abroad.

You can search through either by subject matter or by school. Each item is called a "track" with a series of tracks making up different courses. You can download individual tracks, entire courses, and you can subscribe to a course, so that when new tracks are released, they are automatically downloaded.

These courses can be great refreshers or a good start on learning a new topic. If it is related to massage, or to how you run your massage business, you can use the courses for non-contact hours for continuing education with your license renewal in Oregon (more on this in the box at the end of the article).

Some prefer the video courses, which have visuals of hands-on instruction techniques and can include diagrams. Others prefer the audio-only as they can download them to their iPod (or burn to CD) and listen on-the-go. Some of the audio courses can be challenging as the instructor speaking sometimes refers to diagrams or objects that cannot be transmitted through audio. However, for the most part, these can still be very beneficial.
